INSTITUTE for WOMEN'S HEALTH
TEXAS TECH UNIVERSITY HEALTH SCIENCES CENTER

Because "differences matter", the Laura W. Bush Institute for Women's Health improves the lives of women and girls through:

- Research: supporting scientific discoveries unique to women's health and gender differences
- Education: advancing the knowledge of healthcare professionals through evidence-based resources
- Outreach: connecting with communities for healthier lives

The Laura W. Bush Institute for Women's Health (LWBIWH) is dedicated to the cultivation and advancement of multidisciplinary science in women's health and to the promotion of the well being of women through research, education and community outreach. Our three-tiered approach is uniquely designed to help women live longer, healthier lives.

Established in 2007 and with locations throughout West Texas, the Laura W. Bush Institute for Women's Health (LWBIWH) builds programs to improve the lives of women and their families by applying the resources and expertise from its affiliation with the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center and Angelo State University (part of the Texas Tech University System). The LWBIWH supports scientific discoveries unique to women's health and gender differences and advances the knowledge of healthcare professionals through evidence-based resources. The Institute is setting national standards across the globe. With sex and gender specific resources, health care students and professionals will be well trained in the knowledge that gender influences the care of every man, woman and child. The Institute will also continue to bridge vital links between researchers, health care providers, patients and communities.
